UNMASKING THE HUMAN TUBARIALS: A FUSION IMAGING INITIATIVE

ANATOMY OF TUBARIALS
	Tubarial glands are bilateral structures of 3.9cm length extending from skull base downward along the posterolateral pharyngeal wall predominantly overlaying the torus tubarius.
CLINICAL SIGNIFICANCE	These glands are important during radiotherapy as it can cause function loss associated with xerostomia & dysphagia, hence are referred as OAR- organ at risk.
ROLE OF FUSION
	Molecular fusion imaging modality of positron emission tomography/ computed tomography with radio labelled ligands to PSMA helped in the discovery of these glands. Further research can help us to avoid potential complications of radiotherapy in a much better way.
