1. Introduction

By definition, Patient safety is a discipline in the health care sector that applies safety science methods toward the goal of achieving a trustworthy system of health care delivery. Patient safety is also an attribute of health care systems; it minimizes the incidence and impact of, and maximizes recovery from, adverse events.

Patient safety has always been & will continue to be an important source of public concern. Safe dental care necessary for ensuring good general health aims to minimise risks and establish an open culture of patient safety of which practitioners can learn from their own and others' experience.

Avoiding errors, limiting harm, and reducing the likeliness of mistakes through planning that fosters communication, lowers infection rates, and reduces errors is the keystone of Patient safety. Care providers, patients, and support staff aim for the best possible treatment outcome along with taking patient safety as a cornerstone.

2. Purpose of Patient Safety:

- To reduce harm to a patient during their interaction with health-care services. Including all aspects of an individual's treatment experience, from correct and effective medication, to safe injections, to standards for surgery and other invasive procedures.
- Understanding the principle of patient safety and in turn its role in minimizing the incidence and impact of adverse events, and maximizing recovery from them
- Reducing risks associated with different treatment.

3. Goals of Patient Safety:

- Selection Of patients
- Good communication
- Caution for high alert medications
- Wrong-side, wrong-patient, wrong procedure surgeries to be eliminated
- Reduce the health-care acquired diseases
- Reduce risk of patient hurt against equipment, falls

4. Safety sciences:

“Safety science” is a term that refers to the methods by which knowledge of safety is acquired and applied to create high-reliability designs.

Acquiring the objective knowledge is a scientific matter.

Patient safety uses methods that are appropriate to the purpose, and these can be drawn from a range of disciplines, such as understanding human error, come from human physiology and psychology.

Some, such as systems analysis and quality improvement, come from engineering and management while others as organizational behaviour, come from the social sciences. Still other methods come from health services research.

The disciplines that contribute to safety use the methods that are field appropriate & include controlled experiments, repeat tests, and other traditional scientific methods.

5. Patient safety procedure

A number of mechanisms are involved in achieving patient safety, including:

- High-reliability design. The fundamental mechanism many components which are used to achieve Patient safety. Patient safety delivery is multifaceted; all components of health care delivery must be integrated into a system that is as reliable as possible under complex conditions.
- The complexity theory,demonstrates that open, interacting systems will produce some level of chaos or inherently unpredictable events. High-reliability designs are most dependable when unpredictable events occur.
- Features such as the “lean process” along with a notion of breaking through reliability boundaries from one safety level to another. These levels are known as the sigma levels—through the use of simplified but better processes.
- Multilayered system, is one in which the failures within each of the layers must be aligned for an error to occur, is known as the “Swiss cheese” model of accident causation
- The components that make up the system include the institution and its organization, the professional team and the individuals it includes, and the technology in use.

Swiss Cheese Model- According to this model, a series of barriers are in place to prevent hazards from causing harm to humans. The presence of holes in one of the slices does not normally lead to a bad outcome; but when by chance all holes are aligned, the hazard reaches the patient and causes harm.

•Error traps is another concept on which safety sciences focus. The idea that health care delivery is not only complex; it is also an open interacting system, in which illness is also a given, so the opportunities for making errors are many and endemic. Health care workers and health systems designers should & must take this into account.

6. Patient Safety at YMT Dental College and Hospital

Each member in dental team must :

- Be involved in transmitting basic knowledge on patient safety.
- Integrate the basic steps of “patient safety” in all health care activities.
- Encourage reporting of errors or conflictive situations. 5
- Participate in the discussion of these at staff consultations.
- Encourage the dental team to embrace patient safety.

7. Errors in Clinical Documents, Information, and Referral of Patients:

- Clinical records related to previous pathologies, allergies, and regular medication must be properly completed and must be periodically updated.
- Histories which lack essential data like clinical and allergic background and updated information about medication must be mentioned.
- Under no circumstances should you treat a patient (or prescribe a medication) without having reviewed his or her medical history.
- Use of abbreviations or bad handwriting often lead to confusion on the part of other professionals at the same centre using the same history
- Failure to provide adequate information to the patient about the procedure, its potential risks or recommendations that must be followed to avoid complications
- Inaccuracies in patient referrals to other professionals that may lead them to make mistakes.

8. Prescribing Errors :

• Errors in prescribing and dispensing medication are very common in hospital care. In dental care, prescribing errors are not infrequent and may cause serious even fatal adverse events as described in the second point. To mitigate as much as possible the occurrence and consequences of these adverse events, the dental team must adhere to these safe practices: •

Do not prescribe any medication without performing a “dual control,” reviewing the patient's clinical record and by asking the patient directly about known allergies.

• Inform the patient adequately about treatment: goals, duration, number and characteristics of injections, and the importance of full compliance.

• Avoid errors in the indication for the drug (in relation to the type of drug, dose or duration of treatment)

• Be cautious about allergic reactions that occur because of a lack of adequate medical records

• Drug interactions that occurs because the prescribing practitioner lacks the relevant pharmacological knowledge or fails to update the list of drugs taken by the patient

• Always ask women of childbearing age about the possibility of pregnancy.

• Wrong dose of the drug (especially common in children and in patients with alterations in the metabolism or elimination of drugs)

• Duplication of drugs (especially common with anti inflammatories) because of a lack of coordination among the various professional prescribing for the same patient

• After completion of drug treatment, ask patients about their physical and mental performance and record the appearance of clinical problems during the course of their medication.

9. Use a checklist in all oral surgical procedures

- Although surgical procedures pose risk exacerbation usually present in dental treatments a checklist is needed to reduce errors that can be easily prevented.
- As currently done in surgical procedures at a hospital, the use of a checklist is a valuable tool to avoid most adverse events during oral surgery.
- A checklist helps prevent an erroneous intervention or an intervention being performed in the wrong area, among other risks
- Errors in treatment planning (sometimes associated with lack of adequate clinical records previous to treatment)
- Errors in the type of procedure performed (motivated by incorrect patient identification or inadequate clinical history)
- Errors in the area of intervention (Wrong-site surgery) that occur as a result of forgetfulness or the inappropriate interpretation of records by the professional
- Errors in pre-operative prophylaxis in medically compromised patients
- Errors in the monitoring and control of operated patients (no post-operative instruction sheet or lack of post-surgical control) Post-surgical infections (detected late or inadequately treated).

10. Limit the exposure of patients to ionizing radiation only to what is strictly necessary

- To reduce patient exposure to radiation the following may be done:
  - Restrict patient exposure to ionizing radiation only to what is strictly necessary. Avoid the systematic use of radiographs without clinical suspicion of pathology. These restrictions should be tighter in the case of children.
  - Protect from ionizing radiation anatomic areas that are not under study, using barriers. This is especially recommended in the cervical area.
  - Always be aware of a possible pregnancy among patients or staff potentially exposed to ionizing radiation.
  - Prevent accidental exposure of patients or caregivers to ionizing radiation. Use visual alerts such as posters or lights that indicate the performance of radiographic tests, and so on.
  - Choose diagnostic systems that emit a minimal amount of ionizing radiation.
- Never reuse packaging materials or substances intended for one clinical use only:
- Containers intended for clinical use only contain less preservatives and prevent bacterial growth; therefore, if used repeatedly, they could lead to infection of the area in which the substance is placed.
  - Furthermore, the reuse of disposable clinical materials poses a risk of contamination with blood, which may transmit viral infections to other patients.
  - Reuse of containers to package materials other than the original products can be dangerous & should be avoided.

11. Protect the patient's eyes during dental procedures:

- Patient's ocular protection with goggles, similar to those we use, is one of the easiest and most effective patient safety measures.
- Every dentist has seen different substances or fragments of a material jump to the patient's eyes. Usually, these incidents cause only temporary discomfort.

12. Establish barriers to prevent ingestion or inhalation of materials or small instruments( like eno file/ implant screwdriver etc):

- Ingestion or inhalation of materials or small dental instruments is a “classic” accident during dental care performed without the use of appropriate barriers, rubber dams, or “threads,” ensuring that small tools (such as implant screwdrivers) are not ingested or inhaled.
- The vast majority of ingestion or inhalation accidents usually have no clinical effect, but swallowed sharp instruments may need to be removed by gastroscopy.
- The vast majority of inhalation cases may require performing a bronchoscopy. 8. Monitor the onset and progression of infection in the oral cavity
- Although most infectious diseases in the oral cavity are usually self-limiting, in exceptional cases (and especially in medically compromised patients), they may endanger the patient's life , thus comes in the need for having to manage a life threatening emergency.

13. Have an action protocol for life-threatening emergencies in the dental clinic:

- Vital emergency situations in the dental office are fortunately rare. The tasks and manoeuvres to be performed must be protocolized for the dental team to perform properly and not chaotically. This protocol should include the specific tasks of each team member (stay with the patient, bring and operate emergency instruments or equipment, call for external help, etc).
- A person must be designated to keep medication and emergency equipment updated and ready; keep in mind that some drugs have a short shelf-life.
- The direct care of the patient experiencing a medical urgency is a key aspect in which errors are detected frequently.
- It is essential that the dentist stays with the patient until the emergency is solved or until the patient is taken to the hospital by external emergency responders (paramedics).
- If evacuation to an external health centre is performed by the dental team, the dentist must necessarily accompany the patient.

14. Accidents :

- Falls due to poorly organized furniture, architectural barriers, slippery floors etc
- Heavy or sharp instruments or apparatus fall on the patient.
- The patient suffers accidental cuts and burns
- The patient ingests/inhales small dental material
- The patient suffers eye damage.

15. Patient safety guidelines for students:

- understand the multiple factors involved in failures
- avoid blaming
- practise evidenced-based care
- maintain continuity of care for patients be aware of the importance of self-care.

16. Conclusion:

To provide a recall, the model of patient safety, offers that we identify four main aspects of patient safety:

- (1) Receivers of health care : The patients
- (2) Providers of health care : The doctors & the healthcare team
- (3) Systems of therapeutic action
- (4) Methods and elements within each domain.

We hope that this description, definition, and model will assist the integration of patient safety practices throughout health care.

Dental professionals need to take into account the positive impact of benefiting from evidence-based dentistry, keeping up-to-date in the field of dental science and technology and not ignoring the close relationship between or the inseparable nature of, patient safety, risk management.
